The United States and Western Europe converged in new ways, because Europe chose an approach which differed from the American one greatly. Americans were less affected by the Second World War. That was the reason why they felt more confident while confronting Soviet Union, and the US engaged in the Cold War. In the end of the century, Americans chose more militaristic approach, because they emphasized on military strength. Western Europe chose a way of economic redeveloping because of negative effects of war and constant threats from the USSR. At the present moment, it is less militaristic and more closed, because it operates mostly within the European Union's borders. I believe that these two societies are part of a common civilization. I think this way, because Americans and Western Europeans share the same values. They care about democracy and humanistic principles. There is market economy both in the US and the Western Europe. They both cooperate closely and often support each other. Even the dominant language in the US – English – is widely spoken everywhere in the Western Europe.

De Beauvoir thought that the main problem was the fact that starting from the very young age, girls were educated differently from boys. There were different expectations and treatment of girls. Hence, girls felt that they were inferior. Not only the overall laws and rules of society had to be changed, but the consciousness of people as well. Hence, women had to sacrifice their roles of an attraction and prey in order to become strong, confident, and equal with men. Thus, the main changes included different approaches to upbringing and teaching girls. They had to understand their position in the society instead of relying on men all the time. De Beauvoir's ideas influenced modern feminism greatly. They had helped to develop modern sets of rules and beliefs of feminism. Thanks to them, a modern feminist was born who realized her strength and influence on the society. Other societies were not as influenced as the Western one because of different worldviews and religions. Nevertheless, other societies such as Arabic ones are on their way to transform and become more liberal toward women's abilities.
